YOUTH AND BEAUTY

ITS ATTAINMENT
AND PRESERVATION

AS PRACTICED BY THE BEAUTIES OF THE COURT OF LOUIS XV.

MADAME LA MARQUISE DE POMPADOUR, amid all the glory of Trianon, and at the zenith of her power and beauty, could never have imagined that the secret to which she owed all, would be handed down with jealous care through generations and still be in the twentieth century what it was in the middle of the eighteenth, the talisman of feminine beauty.

The court of Louis XV is historically known to have been the most brilliant assemblage of feminine loveliness. Beauty culture attained at that period a high degree of perfection, and surely we can put full confidence in a treatment that has stood the test of two hundred years.

One of the secret processes which was practiced by the beauty makers at the court of Versailles is now in the possession of MME. LECLAIRE. Many years ago, as a young girl in a convent of the Sacre Coeur, in Austria, she devoted her leisure time to witnessing and practically aiding in the various manipulations of the chemists while experimenting in the laboratory. In this manner she attained a knowledge in chemistry beyond her years, and learned this secret process of inestimable value.

In after years, with this secret in her possession, came the desire to be beautiful herself, and make others so.

She is now a beauty specialist of supreme knowledge and understanding, and is prepared to maintain her position with unrivalled authority and power. A series of treatments from her is equivalent to possessing natural beauty, for by her clever, ingenious and individual attention to each unfortunate defect, she arrives at the most wonderful results.

She urges that to be beautiful women should study their defects and obviate them, for if she ignores them, others will not. It is a joy to behold beauty in any form, and there are serious reasons for the culture of this art; it is not only a duty we owe to ourselves, but to those around us, and no time and thought is wasted in the care given to prevent decay and aid Nature. She contends that to be beautiful there is no particular date or epoch, it is always at every hour, and this ancient process of effacing the ravages of time, weather, or worry, is most marvelous, and should be widely known. She being the fortunate possessor of this secret, practiced it upon herself before making the art of beauty-culture her profession, with the result that to-day, a woman of sixty-three years, she has the velvety, peach-like skin of a baby.

She knows that in beauty lies woman's chief power, and she contends that all women can be made beautiful, and every type can in its own way be perfect. In this case MME. LECLAIRE is a living and undeniable proof of the efficacy of her treatment. She has employed her methods with enormous success for royalty and the reigning beauties of the various courts of Europe. She counts among her patrons the highest nobility in London, Paris, and Vienna; her secret power of creating beauty has obtained a world-wide reputation, on account of its marvelous results. She aims at imparting a permanent beauty, and not as her many so-called rivals, merely a temporary improvement.

In her series of treatment she develops systematically and scientifically certain muscles to the detriment of others. In placing herself in the care of MME. LECLAIRE a woman may become as beautiful as La Pompadour. There are several great advantages in her process, one can perform the necessary duties that society life entails, for there is no discoloration of the skin, no pain, and each seance lasts but fifteen minutes.

The patron is received in a dainty Louis XV salon, in harmony of pale blue and white, and a charming living proof of MME. LECLAIRE'S wonderful skill ushers the visitor into the presence of the famous expert. She herself invariably performs the process.

A deep brown substance is spread evenly over the face, and remains on for five minutes; by that time a sharp, tingling sensation is experienced, which seems to draw every fibre of the epidermis, and imbibes the mysterious substance.

This application is then entirely removed, and a demulcent and soothing preparation of yellowish tint, resembling honey, replaces it; this remains upon the face for several minutes, and imparts a soothing and pleasing sensation, counteracting the effects of the preceding layer. It seems to enter and give fresh life to the skin, effacing lines and hollows, and obliterates in one application any defects which were previously noticeable.

The dreaded crow's feet are effectively erased, and a youthful bloom imparted. The use of this unique preparation prevents pulling and dragging of the skin, which by ordinary massage aggravates the wrinkles.

After the astringents have been entirely removed a complexion powder, known only to MME. LECLAIRE, is dusted lightly over the cheeks, and the seance is ended.

Most emphatically should the woman who desires to remain young and beautiful seek the treatment of this talented beauty specialist.

MADAME LECLAIRE'S creams and powders are the same as were used by famous beauties in the olden times, and can only be had at her salons or will be sent express prepaid upon receipt of price Cold cream, $5.00 a jar. Beauty cream in pink or white, $5.00 a jar. All colors of her famous powders, $5.00 a box.
